The History of Coffee

The fragrant cup of coffee which to the Venetians in 1615 the French writers say is "black as night and as hot as hell" was in 1644 the English and Viennese times many nations in a long and America in 1668. But promptly the romantic history of the world before direct action and resistance made the ninth century after Christ, and coffee houses the targets of tyrants fanciful Arabian nights tales have like Charles II of England, who seen handed down about the first served them sentences of sedition brew.

The most popular legend concerns Kaldi, an Arabian goatherd, whose dull life in the hills made him a the mirror to the mourners, the gloomy Joe Hazel. But he noted mirth and the pranks of people and ate some of the berries his goats were Here in colonial United States, too, were fond of nibbling. Soon he noticed that after eating these berries, the goats became gay creatures a time changed from purely social Thereafter coffee beans were indispensable to his diet and so exciting and lively did he become that he Dragon Coffee Beans "the headiest dance.

A monk, to whom Kaldi confided his superstitious fear of drinking with a result that every sixth grader members of his order. They found the berries sustained them and refreshed and replaced the drink drinkers, of course, were the Pan-American Conference.

BASEBALL NEWS

Lee Theatre baseball team opened the Skyline League season here Sunday with a 12 to 1 victory over Lynchburg. Ed Kirby pitched six innings, allowing one hit, while Dave Cyrus pitched the final three innings, allowing three hits.(

Jack Pugh created his sensational hitting with 3 long doubles, Tetley Hall also and 3 hits, one a grand slam home run far over the right field fence with the bases loaded.

The new app ars nce of the local team will be stronger than the 1941 league team. Kermit Thompson, catcher, had the misfortune to break a finger and will be lost to the team for from 3 to 4 weeks.

Bill Torrence has been signed to take place him.

Saturday the team travels to Bedford, and will return to Appomattox Sunday for a game with Buena Vista at 3 P. M.

Dave Cyrus will pitch Saturday and either Ed Kirby or "Lefty" Grimes will throw against Buena Vista here Sunday.

Much interest is being shown in the new team, with the largest crowds ever attending.

Other Fuels Push Coal for Markets

During the last 30 years, coal as a source of industrial energy has been losing ground steadily to competing fuels, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. The war stimulated a revival, but the advent of peace shows the downward trend to be resuming. Unless the industry can find some means of halting the trend, there is every prospect of economic disaster for the industry.

Various advantages claimed for its competitors are responsible for the trend away from coal, but the leading factor is probably that of cost. Since 1916, the price of coal relative to other commodity prices has steadily risen, whereas the price of petroleum or natural gas has steadily fallen.

A tremendous expansion of barge shipments and pipe line construction has lowered the transportation costs of oil and gas, so that today this cost is only 4 or 5 per cent of their value. Transportation costs for coal, on the contrary, have risen since 1929 and are today about 50 per cent of its value. Labor costs, steadily increasing, now account for 60 per cent of the present average coal price of $2.93 a ton at the mine. The lower costs of competing fuels, on the other hand, have shown a slight decrease and amount to about 1 per cent of the total cost of production.

Increase of Hunting, Fishing Licenses Increases

America's hunters and anglers spent more than 75 million dollars for licenses during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945. The amount, which totaled $75,092,562 represents the purchase of 8,190,601 hunting licenses and 8,320,332 fishing licenses in the 48 states.

This does not necessarily mean that 16,471,133 different sportsmen bought licenses to hunt or fish, for many of these individuals purchased both. Nor does it mean that only 16,471,133 sportsmen wet lines or fired guns, for in some states it is not necessary for a landowner to procure a license to hunt or fish on his own property.

It does mean, however, that a total of 1,135,288 more hunting and fishing licenses were sold in the various states than in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944. Hunting licenses increased 686,643 for an additional revenue of $1,965,100, while the number of fishing licenses bounced upward 449,755 to the tune of $740,238.

Accidental Deaths

Accidental deaths to children 14 years and under increased more than any other age group during the war, the National Safety council reported. Based on a comparison of figures for 1941, the last pre-war year, and 1945, child deaths increased 7 per cent. The toll in 1941 was 13,754 as compared to 14,700 last year. This is an average of more than 1,200 deaths each month to children 14 years and under. Home deaths continued to lead all other types and there were 800 more among children under five years than in 1941. The increase for children 5 to 14 years was 300—or 19 per cent. The toll for all types of accidents in 1945 was 96,000 killed and 10,300,000 injured, the council reported. This is only a 1 per cent increase over 1944. Council statisticians explained that the figure was low because of a 43 per cent reduction in accidents to military personnel, although increases were reflected in most types of accidental deaths to civilians.

Cement Material

Marl, which is used in cement, is a soft earthy material, composed mainly of calcium carbonate that is found as a freshwater deposit in lake basins and bogs and in marshes or low areas that were once covered with water. Its composition is similar to that of limestone. It is usually grayish-white or buff but darker colors may be seen where the marl is contaminated with peaty organic matter. In hardness and consistency fresh marl resembles softened butter. In some of the marsh deposits that are partially drained it is firm enough to be cut into blocks and handled with a shovel, and where compacted under its own weight, marl has the consistency of common mortar when ready for use. In the shallow bays of some lakes where deposition is still in progress, the water may have a milky white appearance due to the suspension of finely divided calcium carbonate, that is kept agitated by wave action.

Contour Cultivation

Soil type and condition, amount and intensity of rainfall, length, irregularity and steepness of slope all influence the effectiveness of contour cultivation. With few exceptions, yields produced on contoured fields are higher than those produced on fields cultivated up and down the slope. Corn grown on a contoured field yielded about 11 per cent more, soy beans 2.5 bushels more per acre, wheat and oats 20 per cent, potatoes 9 per cent and cotton 21 per cent in a recent test. The decrease in run-off ranges from 12 to 100 per cent. In 9 out of 21 tests, the reduction amounted to over 50 per cent. In 6 of the remaining 12, it was well over 30 per cent.
